

Running the Blockade. The Greyhound. Passing the Blockade Line.-The Capture. Yankee Courtesy. Off Fortress Monroe. s Running the Blockade to Europe is a pleasant thought to one in Richmond: the imagination of an adventure at the end of which are golden visions and that beatitude which may be snatched up in plenty to wear and to eat. The first stage of the adventure brings one to Wilmington; and here he already finds in the luxurious cabins of the blockade-runners the creature-comforts to which he has long been a stranger in the Confederate capital, and has a foretaste of some of the sweets of his adventure. Oranges, which, if they existed in Richmond, would be ticketed in some Jew's window at twenty dollars apiece; pineapples, with their fragrant fragrance; wines and liquors, of which we have only the poisoned imitations in Richmond; and an array of cut and stained glass-ware that would have put to blush the stock of all the hotels in the Confederacy (I have been eating and drinking out of tin at the Wilmington hotel,) were set out with a bewildering profusion in the cabin of the Greyhound, when I called to make my respects to Captain Henry and conclude my arrangements for passage out to Bermuda. What a splendid fellow he was: a graceful dash of manner, which yet beamed with intelligence, an exuberant hospitality, a kindness that when it did a grateful thing so gracefully waived all expressions of obligation. He had been all over the world; was familiar with the great capitals of Europe; bore the marks of a wound obtained in the campaign of Stonewall Jackson; and as to his name and nationality why, passengers on blockade-runners are not expected to be inquisitive of these circumstances, and must beware of impertinent curiosity. Want to get out on the Greyhound? Why, certainly; shall be very glad to have you; and the Captain blew his piratical (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and do not occur in the book.)
